Stoughton Utilities welcomes new Energy Services Representative

Stoughton Utilities is pleased to welcome and introduce Energy Services Representative Cory Neeley, whose work with the utility and its customers began in July of this year.

Neeley's responsibilities as an energy services representative include managing the delivery of utility services, customer programs and marketing initiatives for the public power communities of Stoughton, Evansville, Brodhead and Lake Mills, WI. Neeley will support important customer and community relationships – including residential, commercial, industrial, school and municipal energy users.

Additionally, Neeley will help electric customers understand where energy is used and potentially wasted, and find ways to help customers control electric costs and monitor progress toward energy savings goals.

“We are very pleased that Cory will has joined Stoughton Utilities,” said Robert Kardasz, Utilities Director. “Cory will serve as the local resource for helping meet customers’ energy service needs, and we encourage customers to contact Cory with energy efficiency and program questions.”

Neeley's background includes serving as an Energy Advocate in Madison, WI where he helped residential customers save energy in their homes. As part of Neeley's duties as an energy services representative, he works with customers to identify the appropriate utility programs and services to meet their needs.

Neeley participated in an extensive training program at WPPI Energy, the nonprofit power supplier for Stoughton Utilities prior to field assignment in his assigned communities. Through the Energy Services Representative program, the membership of WPPI Energy ensures that each community served has a local representative in place to help the utility and its customers get the most out of the energy-saving programs and services available to the community. Over the next several months, Neeley will be visiting customers to share details of the current programs and services available through Stoughton Utilities.
